Index publishing Wikipedia

In books, indexes are usually placed near the end (this is commonly known as "BoB" or back-of-book indexing). They complement the table of contents by enabling access to information by specific subject, whereas contents listings enable access through broad divisions of the text arranged in the order they occur.

The sublime joy of making a book index without bullshit

Indexing is the reverse: reviewing content and thinking of the idea people would use to identify it. I've done about a dozen indexes so far, mostly for books and manuals I cowrote or edited, but a few for books by other authors (including Seth Godin's Linchpin, which I indexed on a whim.) For me, making an index is like skiing moguls or playing music.
