A Shadow of All Night Falling Dread Empire 1 by Glen Cook

A Shadow of All Night Falling (1979) by Glen Cook is a curious beast, a chimera inside a genre of chimeras. The book at times feels like an oral history, adventure, sword and sorcery, drama, and a few other things that I haven't quite identified.

A Shadow of All Night Falling Dread Empire Glen Cook

In "A Shadow of All Night Falling", we seem to be seeing a young Glen Cook searching for his narrative voice. That voice is strong and compelling in all the Black Company books. In SoANF, it's vague and scattered. The narrative viewpoint moves around a lot, and it's hard to get a feel for any of the characters.

Amazon com Customer reviews A Shadow of All Night Falling

Cook's "A Shadow of All Night Falling" (which I read in the Kindle edition of his omnibus A Cruel Wind) is the first of the main sequence books in his "Dread Empire" series (the other two books in the main sequence ("October's Baby" and "All Darkness Met") are also in that omnibus). This book is a very early example (1979) of Glen Cook's writing.
